In the temporarily occupied territory of the Luhansk region, the invaders are replacing local collaborators with officials from Russia.

Artem Lysogor, the head of the Luhansk Regional Military Administration, said this on Telegram, according to Ukrinform.

"The invaders continue to replace local collaborators with officials from Russia. The Russians do not want to count on the trust of traitors. However, officers from the law enforcement agencies of the so-called LPR quickly found a use for them - they are sent to the front. Employees of the LPR MGB and other agencies are waiting for this," he said.

According to the head of the RMA, the head of the passport office from Dovzhansk recently received a summons.

Lysogor added that the mobilized people in the occupied territory also have a 'special' attitude at the front. Recently, they were banned from using personal cell phones. The punishment is the basement.

To communicate with relatives, the military unit provides a common smartphone for everyone, which is kept with the commander. These restrictions do not apply to Russians, only locals.

As reported, over the past day, August 6, 50 combat engagements between the Ukrainian Defense Forces and Russian invaders took place in different frontline areas.
